THE AGE OF AGENTICS

Grow More. Manage Less.

The 4 moments your business loses work

Tick what sounds like your week. The moment with the most ticks is where time and jobs slip away first.

We design and run the systems that give owner-run businesses back the time to grow, the replies, the reviews, the reminders, so the only thing that still needs a person is the person in front of you.

How to use it

Read each moment and tick the boxes that sound like your week. It takes five minutes. Then count your ticks.

---

1. The call you miss on a job

- □ You can't pick up when you are on site.
- □ Missed calls get a call back hours later, or not at all.
- □ Website enquiries wait until you are back at your desk.

> With a system: a message goes back within a minute, asks what they need and offers a time from your real diary.

2. The quote nobody chases

- □ Quotes go out and you never hear back.
- □ You mean to follow up, then the week fills up.
- □ You are not sure which quotes are still open.

> With a system: a short, friendly follow-up goes out on day two, in your words. Every open quote sits in one place.

3. The reminder you forget

- □ Customers forget the date, or you find out at the door.
- □ You send reminders by hand, the evening before.
- □ A cancelled slot stays empty.

> With a system: a WhatsApp reminder goes out three days before, with one tap to confirm or move it.

4. The review you never ask for

- □ Happy customers rarely leave a review.
- □ You ask days later, when the moment has passed.
- □ Your reviews do not show how good your work is.

> With a system: a thank you with one review link goes out the same evening.

What stays with you

The price, bad news, the first visit and a complaint. A system takes the routine around them, never the moments that need a person.

Your next step

Count your ticks. The moment with the most is the one to fix first.
